Why the name...

John Lavallin "Copper John" Puxley (1772-1856)

A pioneer in the copper mining industry, expanding operations and for many years being the region's highest employer, he built up his fortune and reputation as a careful but forward-looking landlord and businessman. He then served as High Sheriff of Carmarthenshire, Wales, in 1832. In his later years, Puxley chose Tenby as his home.

By the 1840s, he is recorded as residing at No. 2 High Street, then known as Lavallin House. Around this time, the building was remodelled with the fine Bath-stone cornice and elegant Georgian features that still survive. Puxley is also credited with commissioning the neighbouring house (now called The Prize House) in 1851, just a few years before his death in 1856. His presence in Tenby marked both a retreat from the heavy responsibilities of his Irish estates and a sign of the town's growing reputation as a genteel seaside resort.
